

After years of promoting competition and local service, it would be tragic if the FCC were to reverse course and allow more concentrated television station ownership. The trend since 1996 in radio broadcasting suggests what could happen in TV markets as well: fewer voices and more homogenized programming.

I strongly urge the FCC to avoid making any regulatory changes that could lead to further consolidation of media ownership.